Over 35% of adults do not get the recommended amount of sleep.

Getting enough sleep is essential for health and wellbeing. Not getting enough sleep puts your physical and mental health at risk—possibly severe risk. And yet, so many of us struggle to sleep.
Temperature has a big impact on good sleep
Studies and polls have found that temperature is one of the most important factors in sleep quality. Try adjusting to a cooler temp for better sleep.

Find a nightly relaxation exercise
Relaxation exercises help you bring out your body’s relaxation response, which helps you fall asleep. Research relaxation exercises and pick one you like.

Keep to a set schedule morning and night
A consistent sleep pattern is associated with better health and better sleep. Go to sleep at the same time each night and wake up at the same time each morning.

Increase your daytime physical activity
Moderate to high energy exercise can increase your sleep quality and reduce the time it takes you to fall asleep. Put a little extra step in your day for better sleep at night.

Cut out or cut down your alcohol consumption
Alcohol disrupts a lot of your body’s processes related to sleep including melatonin production and rapid eye movement. Limit your alcohol for better quality sleep.

We are still facing a lot of change in the workplace and at home because of the COVID-19 pandemic and everything it has impacted.

» Workplaces are changing their time off policies, return to work plans, and hiring practices due to labor shortages.

» Families need extra childcare because of COVID exposures, sickness, and class cancellations.

» Social planning is still up in the air as people decide what activities and gatherings they’re willing to attend.

According to one poll, 41% of people said their biggest concern over the past year has been about missing time with friends and family. Many people are worried about losing touch with people they no longer see regularly.

Although case numbers are lowering dramatically and more places are opening up, people should still prepare for continued change. Here are a few ways that you can embrace change and improve your health and wellbeing during unstable times:

Focus on your sleep: Sleep and relaxation are big themes for the month and that’s because they’re important! A good night’s sleep is a key way to keep your mood stable and your stress low. You’re more likely to succeed at your tasks and enjoy greater well-being if you’re well rested.

Stay connected: Everybody’s risk tolerance is different, and you might not be ready to go to large gatherings with strangers. But it’s crucial that you have a plan for keeping in touch with the people who are most important to you. Walk outdoors with friends, play with your extended family at the park, connect for a virtual game night. Figure out what works for you and stick with it.

Expect and accept change: Things will continue to change, and if you’re expecting change then you are more prepared emotionally when it does. When you experience a shift at home or work try to focus on what you can create because of this change. Looking for opportunities can give you a sense of control during the instability.

SCHEDULING TIME FOR YOURSELF: PUTTING TIME IN YOUR CALENDAR

Many of us live with a very busy schedule every day. You have a job, kids to take care of, meals to cook, chores to do, and the list goes on. We frequently lose sight of taking care of ourselves. To avoid burnout and manage stress, you need to find time to focus on yourself and take a personal break. One way to make sure this happens is to put time for yourself on the calendar. In your smartphone calendar, block the time you need (it can be 10 minutes if that is what you can manage or an hour for bigger breaks).

Scheduling on your calendar means you have:

» A reminder to take the time
» A block from scheduling other things on top of your time
» A space to write notes about what you want to do during your time
